The Omaha Bee, not a Republican paper, makes this clever though rough "reference to allusion:" "Ben Butler, now that he is Governor of Massachusetts, will adapt as heraldic device a spoon rampant on an eye sinister."

The capital stock was limited to $32,000 per mile, of which over $1,250,000 had been subscribed by M xicans. First mortgage bonds were limited to the same amount. It was expected that when the main line was completed, and bonds and stock used in construction delivered, first mortgage bonds to the amount of $5,800,000 and $2,600,000 in stock would remain in the treasury.

Its Mountains, Plains, Rivers, Deserts, Plateaus and Peoples.

A Glance at the Territory Generally—The Mineral Region—The Navajo, Moqui and Other Indian Tribes.

Arizona is supposed to consist for the most part of deserts and barren, western portions of the Territory consisting of deserts broken by numerous ranges of sharp abrunt mountains of specific process sisting of deserts broken by numerous ranges of sharp, abrupt mountains of sunsets of Southern Arizona or the lava formations. These mountains, downfall of the torrents of rain, nothunder the burning vertical sun, glare ing interested me so much as the like cinders, and always reminded me of what Bayard Taylor said of the Rock of Aden. Arizona possesses twelve to twenty mules. Their pace many proofs of volcanic action, as the is veritably that of a snail. And country around the Gila River and the when there are two or three of these Salt can testify. This truly desert country covers an area of several an unceasing strain of profanity, either thousand square miles.

Pedro Rivers. The largest tributary and natural cunning and quickness, of the Salt is the Verde. This river has eluded and triumphed over the ows through a valley 2500 feet below settlers age the surrounding country. On the were west it is entered through Copper Cañon. From a high plateau on the Prescott road you first look down 3000 feet on Verde Valley, always green except in winter, when it sometimes snows heavily, and on the girdle of chalky mountains, rising tier on tier in a confused mass of white tier on tier in a confused mass of white substitutes and barren neaks. In these Cañon. From a high plateau on the cliffs and barren peaks. In these mountains were the dwellings of the Cave Indians. Though beautiful and very fertile, there is no more unin fact, those I saw were handsome. healthy spet in the Territory than Verde Valley. The principal tributary of the Verde is Oak Creek, the handsomest stream in Arizona. About twelve miles from its junction with the Verde is the center of the Red Rock country. No artist nor poet could do this range of mountains justice. During the rainy reason they are superb, and their thunder-storms to the treasures behind them are three irregular hills from 1000 to 1500 feet in height. The center one is known any thing, but disagreeable. What is irregular hills from 1000 to 1500 feet in height. The center one is known as

THE LONDON TOWER.

It is an exquisitely terraced, carved and sculptured, flat-headed cone, surrounded by a deep dry moat. It is girdled by three stratas of quartz, that shine out distinctly from their deep-rad head cannot do so now. shine out distinctly from their deep-red back-ground. At a distance the Tower seems to be small, but when Tower seems to be small, but when passing it, it springs up in breadth and width as if by magic. Behind these three guards there extends for upwards of a hundred miles mountain and the wonderful irrigating ditches, and the er meuntain and cone after cone, rising from amid a forest of pines, pre-senting to the mind a wilderness of old, deserted, sandstone castles, over which moss and lichen, ivy and wild flower reign supreme. Interspersed among these are mountains of fantastic form, the Ting rs, and the queer square of rock pierced by a small hole through which the blue sky is always visible. The stream, like the country, lacks no beauty. It is full of rapids, cascades, waterfalls, tiny islands, and deep still pools, in some places overhung by high, red bluffs, and its whole course marked by a line of tangled, interwoven trees of vivid green. The water is pure and limpid, and what is better, there is plenty of it, Oak Creek being about the only stream, I believe, in the territory whose vater down. in the territory whose water does not sink through the bed in the dry months. As the water rushes over the mossy boulders, or pours in a white flood over some barrier, or dashes im-petuously by the little islands, scatter-ing foam and spray in its wild course, Ing foam and spray in its wild course, I sometimes thought myself transported to some ideal realm in which the tall waving trees and grass, and grand scenery, were the same as that surrounding the hidden, obscure, but none the less beautiful Oak Creek. North of this are the Sau Francisco Membrais 19000 foot being 1900 foot being 190 untains, 12000 feet high. THE NAVAJOES AND THE MOQUIS. In the northeastern part of the Territory is the Navajo R servation. The Navajoes are skillful in weaving the Navajoe blankets, much prized by the whites. Just south of the Chiquito Colorado are the ruins of the Moqui Indian villages. They are almast inaccessible, but int-resting on account of their antiquity, and on account of their antiquity, and they are one link in the chain of mystery encircling the history of the former inhabitants of Arizona. In another portion of northern Arizona is another portion of northern Arizona is the unexplored valley of the Supar-Yavapai Indians. This valley is walled in by high precepices, down which one white man has ventured, and in doing so lost his life. He was one of a party from Prescott who endeavored to discover an outlet from the valley but failed. The valley was afterward visited. The Supai-Yavapais raise corn and other cereals, besides possessing cattle, horses and sheep. They also have orchards, and I once came into possession of a peach I once came into possession of a peach stone from their valley, but lost it. It walls rise above the river to the height of 6000 feet. The river has washed them to that depth, and is still at its work. The beauty of this river with its many tinted rocky walls is unequaled on the globe.

The Chiquito Colorado is spanned by the suspension bridge of the new railroad from Utah. The water beneath it is a mile and a half away.

In Southern Arizona the grass-belt

In Southern Arizona the grass-belt mbraces about the richest country in the Territory, both as regards mineral wealth and fertility of soil. It includes three notable valleys and several mountain ranges. The valleys are the Santa Cruz, the San Pedro, Sulphur Spring valley and San Simeon valley. The chief ranges are the Santa Ritas, the Whetstones, the Huachueas, Co-chise's stronghold, Mule Mountains and Chiricahuas. Cochise's stronghold is an abrupt, barren mountain, the stronghold of the famous old Chiricahua chief. The Chircahuas are rich in mineral wealth. Mule Mountain is

THE RESORT OF THE SMUGGLERS from Mexico, and in it is the rich Coper Queen. The Whetst nes are reeless range of mountains, and, as if worn by water, slope one way, terminating in conical summits, and then abruptly descend on the other side. At their lower extremity is the New Zea-land Chief, so called from its resemblance to the profile of a New Zealande.'s face—the nose and forehead being perfect. Last, but by no means least, are the Huachucas. They have no equal in the Territory for beauty of coloring, symmetry, grandeur, salubrity of cli-mate and mineral wealth. At their western extremity is an unexplored cave, which bids fair to become another wonder of this so-called unclaimable ountry. Professor and Mrs. Lemmon botanists from Oakland, have been botanizing in these mountains and have made several discoveries. In summer THE HUACHUCAS are a perfect paradise, were it not that too many colonies of our friendly neighbors, the flies, have established themselves in every tree and every accessible nook. Flowers flourish in wild profusion, and on the ridges the scarlet blossom of the mescal and the snowy plume of the yucca are to be seen the summer through. Traveling in this portion of the country just at the close of the rainy season is simply delightful. About ten miles from Cochise's stronghold, surrounded by low, chalky hills, is the CITY OF TOMBSTONE, the center of the greatest silver mines on the Pacific Coast, with the exception of the Comstock mines. The ore is crushed in mills at Charleston, sever mile southwest, and at Contention eleven miles northward, both towns being situated on the San Pedro, a swift, narrow, muddy stream, having very tortuous course and noted for its high banks. In wet seasons, for instance the summer of 1881, the river rises nearly to a level with the surrugged mountains infested with hostille Indian tribes. Such is the case to a certain extent; the central and south-

The boulders were five in number and of a size which indicated that more than one person was engaged in the dastardly plot. The engineer observed the obstructions in time to reduce the momentum of the train, so that when it struck, much of the force was lost, and only the two front trucks of the engine left the track. A delay of several hours was most of the inconvenience occasioned.
